

"BRIAN DAVIS"
CONTEMPORARY MASTER IN A GRAND TRADITION

Although magnificent flowers and landscapes are the main choice for his compositions, Mr. Davis explains. "The Actual job of making an arresting piece of art has nothing to do with what the thing is." Mr. Davis transforms exquisite blossoms like roses, calla lilies, and dahlias into romantic, compelling images with sharpness, color, movement, edge and light.

Mr. Davis believes that the depth in his art is derived from paying attention to the subtle shifts in value-relative dark and light. He is often asked if there is a light source behind his paintings.

The light is the real subject of my work. The flower is the stage, the light is the dancer." Using two hanging mirrors to view the unfinished painting at all angles, he works daily in his studio surrounded by books, music, and historical videos.

One of the greatest achievements in Mr. Davis career has been his commissioned work for The Huntington Library Art Collections and Botanical Gardens. Over the last 20 years, the floral painting expert has created seven pieces that have been used as posters to commemorate different exhibitions at the Huntington. His seventh piece "Captivating Catleya" was most recently used for the "Orchids: A Natural Obsession" exhibit.

"The Process of making a strong piece of art is an inspiration. I love making art. The fun is in the doing."
